The man in the hoodie ambled up, loose-limbed, thin and not very tall, but with that easy sense of command that spoke of great confidence and an absence of fear. "Daniel," Messenger said. "Messenger. Mara." Daniel leaned over, resting his forearms on the roof of the car but lowering his head enough to make eye contact with Messenger.

When I had touched Messenger, I had been deluged by terrifying images of pain, fear, loathing, and despair. In touching Oriax, I unleashed a similarly intense flood of imagery, but . . . oh, the intensity and the suddenness was all the two experiences had in common. For these were not images of pain but of pleasure. What a pale word. Pleasure.
