If you don't share this presupposition about church ministry, you might not benefit from this book. I presume this is the ministry philosophy of the pastors at Willow Creek, who commissioned this sociological study of a thousand (mostly in the United States) churches. The authors categorize church attenders in four buckets: those exploring Christ, those growing in Christ, those close to Christ ...

Most church leaders are passionate about their calling to "go and make disciples." However, despite their most creative thinking, diligent efforts and rigorous assessments, year after year they arrive at the end of a ministry season with no way of knowing for sure whether they have succeeded or failed in their calling. "I want to serve God," the refrain goes, "and on most days, I ...

Among the top 5% of churches in their survey, there are mega churches and small churches. It's not the quantity of people that correlate with spiritual health. Willow Creek, which became a mega church in the 1980's, believed offering many activities and pushing members towards those activities would help members grow spiritually.
