The Germanic substrate hypothesis attempts to explain the distinctive nature of the Germanic languages within the context of the Indo-European languages. It claims that those elements of the Common Germanic vocabulary and syntactical forms which do not seem to have cognates in other Indo-European languages, suggest that Proto-Germanic may have been either a creole or a contact language that ...

Identifying Ferns. Unlike many other vascular plants, ferns do not have aerial stems. The leaves arise from an underground stem, called a rhizome. The entire fern leaf is called a frond. The frond consists of the stipe and the blade. The continuation of the stipe to which the leaves are attached is called the rachis. A leaflet is called a pinna (plural, pinnae).

Much of this timber is sourced from buildings built 50 to 100 years ago. While buildings that are demolished are often outwardly decrepit or derelict, in many cases the timber used in their construction has been extremely well preserved, and can be prepared for safe and stylish re-use with relative ease.
