It is confusing to talk about the 'concentration of water', so we can say that a diluted solution (R) has a high water potential and a concentrated solution (L) has a low water potential. There is a water potential gradient between the 2 sides. The water molecules diffuse down this gradient, from a high water potential (R) to a low water potential (L).

There are many occasions when cells need to take in substances which are only present in small quantities around them. E.g. root hair cells in plants take in nitrate ions from the soil. Their concentration are often higher inside the root hair cell than in the soil, so the diffusion gradient is from the root hair to the soil. Despite this, the root hair cells still can take nitrate ions in, by ...
