The first political point to make is that terrorism is a hugely loaded term and even the majority of Terrorism Studies scholars see it as a pejorative. There is no agreed upon definition of terrorism. It is often associated with non-state and, very often, non-Western violence, making it a discourse and not just a term.

Making a political killing out of murder. When the politicians start telling us about more of the historical factors during the dark days, Mr Holness and others can speak of the link between voting for any political party and the homicide rate. My caution to him, though, is that he balances his enthusiasm with the data,...
