In Moral Politics, George Lakoff gives us two models for running a family—the strict father and the nurturant parent. He then attempts to show that these are also the conservative and liberal models for government, and explains why the nurturant parent/liberal government model is superior to its counterpart.

When Moral Politics was first published two decades ago, it redefined how Americans think and talk about politics through the lens of cognitive political psychology. Today, George Lakoff's classic text has become all the more relevant, as liberals and conservatives have come to hold even more vigorously opposed views of the world, with the underlying assumptions of their respective ...

Moral Politics: How Liberals and Conservatives Think by ...

In Moral Politics, George Lakoff makes the case that people's political reasoning is determined to a large extent by unconscious metaphors. The political views of Americans on both ends of the political spectrum derive from the metaphor of the nation as a family, he says. But the liberal and conservative worldviews are informed by two very different conceptual models of the ideal family.

There are no moral roots other than destroying your political opposition by any means necessary. We're just splitting up into our own tribes and attacking and dehumanizing the other side.....I'm curious how long that can continue until words turn into violence or until acts of violence like terrorism such as church and synagogue shootings turns into a civil war.
