One tends to compare a bit when reading travel books, and in this case, Andrew P. Sykes comes to mind, especially his "Crossing Europe on a bike called Reggie". This book seems - at first look - to fit into the category "man is unsatisfied with life, takes on challenging journey to discover the meaning of it all".

A great blend of philosophy, attention to the interesting sights in the landscape, and most importantly, a sense of respect for the people the author encounters. Unless the Josie Dew bike travelogue I just read, "One Man and his Bike" is a far more positive (and yet, I believe, realistic) view of what it's like to travel by bike.
