More Than Human Theodore Sturgeon

More Than Human is a 1953 science fiction novel by American writer Theodore Sturgeon. It is a revision and expansion of his previously published novella Baby Is Three, which is bracketed by two additional parts written for the novel ("The Fabulous Idiot" and "Morality"). It won the 1954 International Fantasy Award, which was also given to works in science fiction.

More Than Human - Wikipedia

More Than Human is not an easy read. Theodore Sturgeon was never shy about pushing boundaries and trying to shake up a reader's comfortable little world. The theme of the novel is certainly fascinating -- the emergence of a new human species - homo gestalt (though the ending and hints earlier in the book suggest we've always been it).

Theodore Sturgeon's More Than Human is a literary exploration of the essential qualities of "humanness" revealed through the merging of societal outcasts, each with unique attributes that are distinctly non-human. Unfolding over three parts, a telepath, a telekineticist, twins with telepresence, and an infant that is mostly cerebrum, gradually ...

I sat down to write this review after reading "More than Human" by Theodore Sturgeon and "Cryptozoic" by Brian Aldiss within a day of each other. I had thought at first that "Cryptozoic" was the older work, and had hoped that might explain the somewhat dated feel of "Cryptozoic" and the apparent modernity of "More Than Human".

If there is a flaw to More Than Human, it comes from the writer's desire to achieve more than fiction. If you think that sci-fi books don't pay attention to deep inner meanings, you will be surprised by the conclusion to this work, in which Sturgeon reaches for something bigger than a story of this scale can deliver.
