Mad Love Andre Breton

André Breton, the father of the surrealist movement, wrote Mad Love (L'Amour Fou) in 1937. This book is very hard to describe. In a nutshell, it's a celebration of love and his lover, Jacqueline Lamba. In Breton's opinion, love is the most marvelous thing in the world and it should be felt intensely and transcendently. It should be a 'mad love'.

Mad Love Quotes by André Breton - Goodreads

Andre Breton's Mad Love is truly a work of art. Written in a surrealist manner it celebrates love and lovers. It finds beauty in such ordinary things such as iron masks, spoons, and trees. Never has there been another book that promotes romanticism such as this. Bravo Breton! You have made me proud to be a person in a monogamous relationship.

A Book Interrupted by Love. Not long ago I wrote about Andre Breton's 1928 novel Nadja, which includes embedded photographs. In 1937, Breton wrote another photographically-illustrated novel called L'Amour Fou, or Mad Love.. Oddly, it took half a century for an English translation to appear from the University of Nebraska Press (by Mary Ann Caws).
