Never Deal with a Dragon by Robert N. Charrette - Goodreads

Chapter One. It's amazing how often my day starts with a three-legged dragon and an enraged dairy farmer. I stood, clad in a set of knee-high muck boots and a brand new pencil skirt, and tried to restore some order to my first appointment of the day, an encounter involving a very hungry dragon and the dairy farmer whose cattle had been unfortunate enough to be within grabbing distance at ...

A little background on the players. There's a total of 4 and it's a 50/50 split between veteran Shadowrun players and novices. Recently the rookies have been asking about the street proverb of "Never, ever, cut a deal with a dragon." and of course the veterans tell the rookies that making deals with dragons is like making a wish on a monkey's paw.

Never, ever, cut a deal with a dragon. : Shadowrun

The warning never to deal with a dragon may as well read 'never make a deal with a god' because that is essentially what a dragon is in the 6th World, just without worshipers (usually). Edit: Better wording for clarity reasons.

Why never deal with a dragon? : Shadowrun - reddit

Well, as many of you may know, my party has recently had several altercations with various dragons, resulting in a Great Wyrms Green telling them that from now on, any dragon they kill will result in the death of a human city. To make her point stronger, she killed the party sorcerer (via the Deman Spell and attacking), then dropped the sorcerer into an awards ceremony designed to praise the ...
