My World of Flops #117/My Year of Flops II #14 Winter's Tale (2014) Oscar-winning Batman & Robin screenwriter Akiva Goldsman's 2014 directorial debut, Winter's Tale represents an unusually pure flop. As long as the epic boondoggle has been on my radar, it's been as a cinematic disaster for the ages, the staggeringly misguided tale of a ...

Belushi was out of control. Even worse, he was no longer a sure-fire moneymaker. 1981's Continental Divide, this week's entry in My Year Of Flops: Rejected Rejects, had the potential to save both Belushi's life and his career. It was filmed largely on location in Montana and Washington, far from the pushers, parasites and hangers-on that plagued Chicago and Los Angeles.

Some failed films burrow their way deep into the subconscious, lingering furtively in the psyche long after better, more accomplished films have faded completely. Tom Twyker's Perfume, one of the inspirations for My Year of Flops, was one such film. So is Spike Lee's 2000 flop Bamboozled, which I initially found to be an intermittently fascinating but mostly maddening jumble of strained satire ...

On Jan. 25, 2007, I began an online blog project called "My Year Of Flops." I had a simple goal: to lay down the foundation for a series of lucrative PowerPoint presentations that would show small-business groups how life lessons from failed films could help them maximize efficiency, exploit multiple ancillary revenue streams, and explosify profits.

My last blog post, a painstakingly tossed-off, "Hey look at this kooky clip I done found on the Internet" hackterpiece about Stephen Colbert "rapping" on Whose Line Is It Anyway, received a curiously schizophrenic response. It was eviscerated in the comments yet received more Diggs than all my other blog posts, interviews and My Year Of Flops entries combined.

Wim Wenders 1997 crapterpiece The End Of Violence surveys a United States where the government covertly spies on its own people in the name of protecting them. It anticipates a paranoid national climate of free-floating fear and dread where people are willing to sacrifice liberty for a greater sense of security. The tragic events of September 11th and the rise of the Patriot Act should lend ...
