Nobody Move >> Denis Johnson

After his award-winning Vietnam epic, Johnson takes a busman's holiday with this hard-boiled genre exercise. While his previous novel Tree of Smoke (2007) elevated Johnson to a new level of renown, here he seems to take great delight veering toward the gutter in a fast-paced, dialogue-driven crime novel that explores the baser instincts of some California grifters.

NOBODY MOVE by Denis Johnson | Kirkus Reviews

There was something about the characters and emotions that felt realer, whereas this novel feels like a book version of a subpar Quentin Tarantino movie. The main character of Nobody Move, Jimmy Luntz, is a sketchy lowlife (I get the feeling sketchy lowlifes are the #1 kind of character Johnson likes to write about.)
